

The Expiration of the Iranian Regime

(Translated)

There is no incentive for America to exploit the Iranian protests, ride their wave, fuel them, and support them, except that it has exhausted all the services the Iranian regime has provided to America, since it orchestrated the coup against the Shah, in favor of Khomeini in 1978, and brought him from France as the leader of what was called the “Islamic” Republic of Iran. Furthermore, America senses that it cannot exploit the regime any further than it already has, using the regime in implementing its dirty colonialist projects in the region, and the Muslim World as a whole.

It should not be imagined that the Iranian regime has rebelled against America, or that it prioritizes the interests of its people, to which it claims to belong, over the interests of America, or even its own “national” interests over those of America. This has never been an option for the Iranian regime, and the regime in Iran has never attempted to break free from its subservience to its American master, not even once, throughout the decades it has allied itself with America, that is, since the coup America orchestrated in favor of Khomeini and his followers.

Despite the Iranian regime, headed by Khamenei and previously by Khomeini, providing various services to implement American projects in the region, these services did not earn it favor with the American president in the White House. America's agent, Hosni Mubarak, was right when he said, “He who seeks shelter with America is left naked.” Since the rise of the Ayatollahs' regime, it waged a brutal war on Iraq on behalf of America, a war that lasted for nearly ten years, claiming millions of lives and squandering billions of dollars. Afterward, the regime paved the way for America to invade Afghanistan and then Iraq, as more than one Iranian official has stated, such as Mohammad Ali Abtahi, the former vice president, who said, “Without Iranian cooperation, Kabul and Baghdad would not have fallen so easily.”

During that period and afterwards, the regime meddled in Lebanon through its proxy, Hezbollah, and then in Syria by providing unconditional support — money, weapons, troops, and the Revolutionary Guard — to the Alawite regime, America's agent in Syria. This support enabled the regime to perpetrate massacres, and violate the honor of Muslims, for a decade. During and after this period, the regime also supported the Houthis in Yemen, again on behalf of America.

After all these significant services, which even America itself couldn't provide, whilst it hadn't succeeded in any of the aforementioned colonialist projects in Muslim countries, America reached the conclusion that the regime's usefulness had expired and that it was no longer suitable for any new project in the region. This was especially true given the presence of other agents capable of carrying out America's needs, such as the Saudi regime, the Egyptian regime, the Pakistani generals, the Jewish entity, and the hypocritical Ankara. Furthermore, Europe, America's “sworn” ally, refused to deal with the Iranian regime, accept it within the Middle East order, or even tolerate any interaction with it. This was compounded by the Jewish entity's use of the Iranian regime as a pretext for its own lack of complete compliance with American will, most recently demonstrated by the implementation of Trump's twenty-point plan in Gaza. For all these reasons, America concluded that the time had come for this regime to depart and be replaced by another, more acceptable one — locally, regionally, and internationally — which it could then use for a while until it, too, expired.

The protests taking place in Iran are natural and spontaneous, not orchestrated by anyone, neither America nor any other international or regional power. The Iranian regime is corrupt, like all the oppressive and failing regimes in various countries of the Muslim World. The people of Iran are like other Muslim peoples who resent their rulers who have inflicted great suffering upon them. These regimes, especially the Iranian one, lack popular support. The demonstrations held to show support for the regime are merely crowds mobilized by the regime itself, using its well-known police and intelligence methods. Since the regime lacks popular support, its only option is to bow down to its master, and agree to every concession demanded of it. If its master refuses these concessions, it will wait for the knife to be brought forth to slaughter it on the altar of Abu Righal and Ibn al-Alqami, the treacherous agents of foreign powers. This seems to be what will soon befall the Iranian regime and Khamenei himself.

If the Iranian regime possessed even a shred of dignity, independence, or honor, it would have preempted America's advance before it was slaughtered. It would have taken steps to preserve its own power and salvage what little dignity remained. The Iranian regime could preempt the military strike America intends to launch against it, by inflicting painful blows on American military bases in the region, most notably the Jewish entity, the Al Udeid Air Base in Qatar, and the aircraft carriers heading towards them from the South China Sea. However, it seems the regime has not learned from the mistake of Saddam Hussein, who waited for America to complete its military buildup, until the moment of truth arrived, leading to his downfall and the demise of his regime.

If there were anyone within the regime who believed in Allah (swt) and the Day of Judgment, they would have handed power over to the sincere within the Islamic Ummah, the advocates of the project of the Khilafah (Caliphate) on the Method of Prophethood, such as Hizb ut Tahrir. This is the only Hizb capable of protecting the country and its people from American aggression and invasion of Iran and the region. But, alas!

It is the established Sunnah (Way) of Allah (swt) that He only grants nasr (victory) to His Deen, and empowers Islam, through those who believe, are pious, and perform righteous deeds. This does not apply to the regime in Iran, which has been an enemy of Allah (swt), His Messenger (saw) and the believers, since its inception at the hands of malicious America. Therefore, we can only expect to witness the demise of this regime at a time chosen by America itself. There is no power or strength except with Allah (swt).

What is happening in Iran, and what its future holds, is a lesson for all the agents and followers of colonialism and America, among the Ruwaibadah, lowly rulers of the Muslim world. The lesson they must learn is that unless they implement everything America commands, whether they are capable of doing so or not, America's displeasure with them means getting rid of them, throwing them into the dustbin of history, and overthrowing them without regret, remorse, or hesitation. However, this lesson will not be learned from these Ruwaibadah. They neither understand until they are made to understand, nor do they fear Allah (swt) out of piety, until they will be made to fear Him. However, the hope remains that the sincere people of the Ummah, from the general public, the influential, and the people of military power, will save this Ummah from the recklessness and ignorance of these rulers, so that they get rid of them, before America does, and replace them with a Khaleefah (Caliph) who rules by the Book of Allah (swt) and the Sunnah of His Prophet (saw). If they do not do so, they will have sacrificed their people and its resources, and will be just as evil as these current rulers, and will be complicit in causing harm and destruction to the country and its inhabitants.

Therefore, we call upon the sincere people of military power in the various Muslim lands, including those in military power in Iran, to grant Nussrah (military support) to Hizb ut Tahrir in order to salvage what remains of this Ummah's disarray and reunify its forces. Otherwise, matters will only worsen. Will the wise, rational, and sincere individuals within the Muslim armies, including the sincere members of the Iranian army, respond to this call? O Allah, open their hearts and guide them to the straight path by siding with their Ummah and granting Nussrah to Hizb ut Tahrir. Ameen.
